Claims 1-12

The invention of the claims is a modular catheter which includes an elongate tubular member having a proximal end and a closed, distal end with a lumen extending from the proximal end to the distal end and a plurality of electrodes arranged at, or adjacent, the distal end, conductors for the electrodes being contained within a wall of the tubular member, an elongate shape-imparting mechanism removably received within the lumen of the tubular member such that a distal end of the shape-imparting mechanism is substantially in register with the distal end of the tubular member, and a control device having a proximal end and a distal end, the proximal end of the tubular member and a proximal end of the shape-imparting mechanism being releasably connectable to the distal end of the control device.

The closest prior art of:

discloses a steerable ablation catheter system comprising an elongate tubular member (2) having a proximal end and a closed, distal end with a lumen extending from the proximal end to the distal end and a plurality of electrodes (8, 9) arranged at, or adjacent, the distal end, and a control device (5) having a proximal end and a distal end, the proximal end of the tubular member (2) being releasably connectable to the distal end of the control device (5) but fails to teach conductors (18, 27) for the electrodes (8, 9) being contained within a wall of the tubular member (2), or that an elongate shape-imparting mechanism (13, 26) is removably received within the lumen of the tubular member (9).
